This recorded webinar features a clinical expert in the management of gynaecological conditions, including endometriosis and heavy menstrual bleeding. It provides an overview of the treatment options, including newer medicines such as gonadotropin-releasing hormone (GnRH) antagonists, alongside practical considerations to support their use within care pathways.

The session explores how treatment can be individualised, supporting shared decision making and helping people understand the options available at different stages of care. It also highlights opportunities for healthcare teams to review current practice, optimise care pathways, and improve outcomes.

The webinar is aimed at healthcare professionals and decision makers, including GPs, nurses, pharmacists, gynaecologists, commissioners and long-term conditions leads, to support the understanding and application of NICE recommendations in practice.
